28 Safety and Health Compliance for Hazmat: The "HAZWOPER" Standard

BY JOSEPH M. GOLDEN JR.

With as many as 1.8 million workers at risk for hazardous-materials exposure, OSHA and the EPA have recently published rules regulating hazmat safety operations. This article summarizes these rules, commonly referred to as HAZWOPER, and addresses their impact on EMS agencies and employees.

34 Pre-employment Back Injury Screening: The Employer's Crystal Ball

BY CASEY TERRIBILINI, DC, AND
KATE DERNOCOEUR, EMT-P

A properly designed pre-employment screening process can prevent unnecessary headaches for the EMS provider and service alike. This article describes various back-screening processes that can help determine whether an EMS responder is at risk of injury.

40 Burning the EMS Candle: EMS Shifts and Worker Fatigue

BY RUSS McCALLION, EMT-P, AND
JIM FAZACKERLEY, EMT-P, MPP

Has coffee become your best friend? Do you sleep only in your dreams? Is your bed merely an illusion? If so, you are not alone; sleep deprivation is a fact of life for many EMS personnel. Though widely accepted, isn't it time that we question the effects of those long days and nights?

45 Why Do Paramedics Work Those Long 24-hour Shifts?

BY ADAM MEIROVITZ, EMT-1A

50 EMS Offshore: A New Horizon for Paramedics

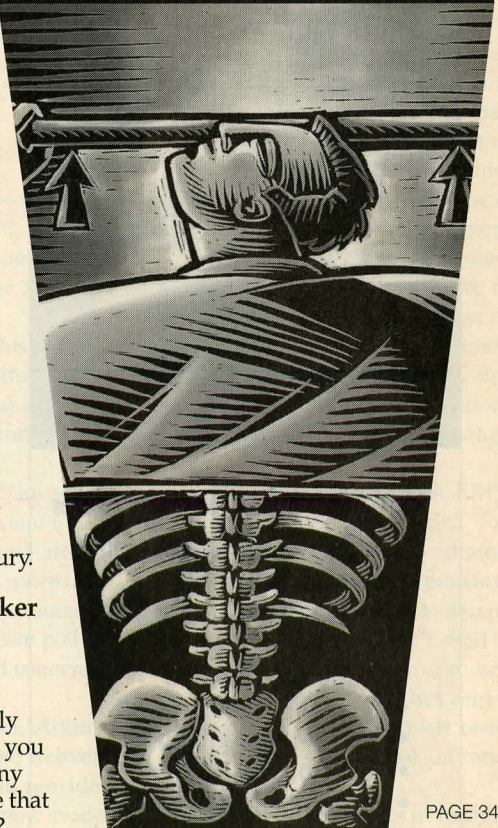

BY ALANA S. MALLARD, EMT

The difficulty in getting medical aid to offshore drilling platforms can be a source of life-threatening delays. Recently, some companies have charted new waters by actually stationing EMS crews on their rigs.

56 The Ultimate Emergency: Managing Aortic Aneurysms

BY THOMAS C. GRUBBS JR., RN, BSN, EMT-P

While prehospital management of an abdominal aortic aneurysm is fairly straightforward, treatment varies greatly depending on whether the aneurysm is leaking or ruptured. This article identifies the signs and symptoms associated with the different stages of an aneurysm and demonstrates the varying management methods and the need for rapid surgical intervention.
