FEATURES

- 39 Why Johnny Can't Defibrillate BY KENNETH R. STULTS, MS. Early defibrillation programs have doubled in the U.S. over the past two years – yet the evidence is clear that, without a sophisticated outcome-based quality assurance mechanism, such programs will be unlikely to fully maximize patient survival.
- 42 Consider a Change of Heart (On Cardiac Pacing) (CEU Article) BY MIKEL ROTHENBERG, MD. Cardiac pacing in different forms has been used for many years. The technique of transcutaneous pacing is described, and three case reports are presented. This is the final article in the pilot program for continuing education units (CEUs).
- 49 Knockout: Insight Into Sports Eye Injuries BY RODGER B. GOLDMAN, MD. Dr. Goldman recognizes the critical role of emergency personnel in treating sports eye injuries to minimize vision loss. This article discusses specific treatment and examination of types of injuries.
- 52 Breathing Life Into EMS BY EUGENE L. NAGEL, MD, AND JAMES C. HIRSCHMAN, MD. The field environment for civilian emergency care in the '50s and '60s was rather simply structured. The concept of rapid response vehicles was well established with rapid transport to the nearest medical facility its object. This article takes a close look at the past to get a good picture of how far EMS has come.
- 55 City Quick to Defibrillate BY MEL A. OCHS, MD. EMT-D programs have not been a universal success. One unique, small U.S. community shares its experience and outlines its course of action, from concept to implementation to lives saved.
