The Diabetic Patient: New Methods of Control Bring Fresh Hope31
 Diabetes is the #3 killer in the U.S. An understanding of its origins, symptoms and new methods of control will help the prehospital provider better evaluate the patient suffering from this condition — by Kate Dernocoeur

Back to Basics: Measuring the Effects of Continuing Education39
 The paramedic's knowledge base can deteriorate, especially in basic skills, without adequate continuing education. This article describes a study which measured and compared knowledge and skill retention among paramedics — by Bonnie Mandel, RN

The Pupils and the Patient42
 An accurate documentation of every patient's pupil response should be provided, even though treatment is never based on this response alone — by Charles B. Slonim, MD

Picking a Winner: Candidate Selection for Paramedic Training46
 A sound selection process for the paramedic is an important ingredient in any training institution's success — by Tarry Q. Kemp

Financial Strategies for Surviving the '80s, Part 2: Billings, Collections and Accounts Receivable50
 This part of the operation of an ambulance service can be more complex than is generally appreciated, if management practices are to be both humane and effective — by Alan Jameson

Self-Instruction for Paramedics: An Alternative to the Standard Lecture58
 The traditional method of lecture presentation is compared with an automated, self-instructional slide/tape program and the learning outcomes evaluated through competency examinations — by Michael Friedman and Gene Weatherall
